EVALUATOR_____

Note to the Evaluator: You have been assigned to evaluate this speech in such a manner as will best help the speaker. It is your privilege to give them encouragement and wise counsel so that their next attempt may be still better.

The speaker's assignment was to make a speech which would involve earnestness and conviction. It was to be a speech of protest or appeal.

The first question is: Did the speaker "make the sale"? Did they win the audience by the force of their argument and the earnestness of their appeal? Write your opinion on this point, stating it clearly. In your spoken evaluation, give primary attention to discussion of this item, showing why and how they succeeded or failed. Give the speaker the most friendly and helpful suggestions you can offer for improvement.

Was the purpose clearly stated?

Was the purpose achieved?

Did the speaker show improvement over their first speech? In what ways?

What obstacles does the speaker have to overcome?

What are the strong points in their style of speaking?

What specific suggestions can you give them for making the next speech better? It will deal with speech construction, with special emphasis on opening and conclusion.
